STOCKING THE POND
Taken from ODNR's "Ohio Pond Management Handbook"

A properly stocked and managed pond will provide years of quality fishing. Stocking the proper kinds, sizes, and numbers of fishes will start a pond in the right direction. Most Ohio ponds are ideal for largemouth bass, bluegills, and channel catfish, and all three provide excellent fishing and fine eating. An initial stocking of a combination of these fishes is usually recommended for new or renovated ponds. Properly managed largemouth bass and bluegills will produce self-sustaining populations, whereas channel catfish usually require periodic restocking. Channel catfish are often considered bonus fish because they don't interfere with the other pond fish, but provide extra fishing and harvest opportunities. Redear sunfish can also be stocked as a bonus fish in combination with bluegills and are popular because they rarely become overabundant and often grow to large sizes. However, they can be more difficult to catch than bluegills. Another fish which is occasionally stocked in farm ponds is the triploid grass carp, or white amur. Unlike largemouth bass, bluegills, redear sunfish, and catfish, grass carp are not stocked for sport to eat, but to control or eliminate nuisance aquatic vegetation.
